| 1 | On the Tibetan plateau in China there was no place to hide. The snow | |
| 2 | flew around us like arrows. Our Tibetan herder, Meiga, has forced his horse | |
| 3 | through the storm and was searching for shelter. When the visibility dropped | |
| 4 | to near zero all which we could do was stop and bunch up the horses. | |
| 5 | My goal was to travel the length of the Mekong, the world's twelfth | |
| 6 | longest river. To reach this place I had been travelled a thousand miles in an | |
| 7 | old army jeep from Xining. Now, as we were sheltered behind our horses, I | |
| 8 | wondered if we would have to turn back. Then the storm lifted up, as suddenly | |
| 9 | as it had ever begun, leaving a bruised grey sky. | |
| 10 | After we rode another hour before coming to a solitary, cone-shaped hill. It | |
| 11 | was the holy mountain, Meiga told us. He reached into his saddlebag and | |
| 12 | pulled out a stack of colored papers printed out with Buddhist scripture. | |
| 13 | He shouted and flung the prayers high over into the air and watched happily | |
| 14 | as the wind swept them away. | |
